REG. U.S. PATENT OFFICE

BEES AND EGGS COME DOWN THE SHOOT THAT HANDLES THE PARCEL POST.

Washington.

Dear Pals: Do you get your breakfast eggs by parcel post? It certainly seems funny to get eggs by mail, but there are lots of people that do. Yes, and they get bees that way, too. I paid a visit to the parcel post department of the post office and I wish you could see the way they have to keep that mail moving. You would want it kept moving, too, if you were waiting for the breakfast eggs, I guess.

I thought that was pretty good when the Washington business men christened Postmaster Chance here in Washington "Mail Office" Chance. You see his initials are "M. O." and he has a big campaign on to collect the mail in the business section every half hour by a speeding squad of motor cycles. That keeps the mail from piling up in the boxes and gets it to the post office before the night shift comes on and, of course, a lot of it gets handled early.

Here is what the regulations say about what you can put in the parcel post: "Unlimited matter of the fourth class (parcel post), which embraces all mailable merchandise not exceeding in size 48 inches in length and girth combined and not exceeding 16 pounds in weight to the first, second and third zones, and 50 pounds to the fourth zone, and 50 pounds to the fifth zone, and 50 pounds to the sixth zone, bearing the name and address of the sender and prepared for mailing in such manner that the contents can be easily examined, is mailable at the main office and its branches and stations, except as noted hereafter, at the rates of postage provided for in the following table."

Say, girls and boys, that was a long one. Now you know what you can send by parcel post. But that is just the introduction, you might say, for the rest of the shoot looks like an income tax blank we have read so many jokes about from the fellows

BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

The Twins Find Buzztail.
BY THORNTON W. BURGESS.

If you suspect a warning here, I thought you may think you do need it. Bear.

What could be making that sharp whirring, which, as it grew louder and uglier sounding, became almost a rattle, the twin Bears couldn't imagine. It certainly couldn't be anything very big, for that noise seemed to come from a place where no one could see anything very big could be hidden. There were no big rocks where that sound seemed to come from. There were many small ones, but none big enough for the twins to even think of hiding among them. So they were sure that the cause of that queer noise must be too small to be feared.

Whenever they stood perfectly still for a moment or two the noise would cease, but just as soon as they moved it would start again. It was Boxer who finally found where, what and who that noise was coming from. On a little flat shelf of rock he discovered the most curious looking per-

One End Necklace

Something delightfully new! A one-end necklace. A handsome one can be made by choosing beads of two colors: as black and red. The red are the smaller ones. String enough red beads to make a circle one-inch in diameter. Join the thread, on which you are to string the necklace, to one of the beads in the circle. String sufficient number of the black beads to encircle your neck and leave an end as long as you desire. Slip the string of black beads through the circle of red ones. Join some sort of quaint Chinese pendant to the end and your unique one-end necklace is complete.

Fashion Notes.

Silk hats have feather brims. Suit skirts are slightly wider. Dance frocks have narrow ribbon sashes. Draped skirts are slightly tilted in front. Sleeves sometimes have full lace undersleeves. Deep square collars fall below the waist line. Dresses of every type have short capes to match. The majority of sleeves stop above the elbow. Silk crepe is used for the tailored blouse with high collar. Large, shaggy taffeta flowers are used on evening gowns. Embroidered net is used on a skirt of white chiffon.

Cocoanut Oil Fine for Washing Hair

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, use the careful what you wash it with. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle and is very harmful. Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo is much better than anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair. Simply moisten your hair with water and rub it in. One or two teaspoonfuls of Mulsified will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanses the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily, and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo at most any drug store. It is very cheap, and a few ounces is enough to last every one in the family for months. Be sure your druggist gives you Mulsified—Advertisement.

Frocks and Capes.

The human being in its love and need of a wrap has divided its attention between capes and coats. Both are as old as time. Every nation has found a way to ornament these garments and turn them into things of cost and luxury.

The early Persians and Egyptians put the bulk of their ornamentation on coats, and we find in the museums the square garments richly incrustured with crystals and embroidery which were worn by men on their wedding day; there are also primitive capes of fabric that resembles metal which were worn by conquerors and kings when men thought that the glory of garments was for them, not for the gentler sex.

These two garments have figured throughout the history of the world. Somehow the coat has become the expression of formality, used for the hours of splendor, and the cloak has been associated with mystery, crime and romance.

The world once thought of a brigand and a lover in a cloak; now the world thinks of a peasant and a woman in an of fashion in the same garment. It was natural that with the inspiration of many fashions coming from the Italy of the renaissance the cloak would rise to heights of popularity. It accompanied the tricorn hat, the masquerade veil, and both these accessories of fashion have been reinstated in this adventurous twentieth century. Goodness knows there are enough brigands around to suggest the cloak.

The new fashion is to build a cape for every frock that is not a tailored suit and ask women to follow the fashion as best they can. The average woman cannot follow it so they say. She can choose, however, a neutral type of cloak, one that will harmonize with the frocks she wears throughout the season. It is not hard to do, but few things in economy are easy.

The dressmakers suggest the use of gray for such a cloak; it combines with many colors. The sketch shows a cape that was built for a certain gown, but which can be worn with several others. The material is gray crepe de chine with a high collar made from the breast feathers of a bird, a new trick in ornamentation. The lining is the same as the outer surface and the back is elongated to keep the garment in the picture of the hour.

The gown beneath it is of silver lace and crepe and the skirt dips downward in the back according to this prescription: give out for most clothes: Do not permit a regular hem. When these irregular hems first came into fashion women insisted that they could not follow it for they were contrary to all the rules of making clothes; but they have succeeded so strongly that they are no longer noticed. The dressmaker accepted as a commonplace. The designers think that the extreme lengths to which some of the skirts go in this respect is evidence of the future lengthening of all skirts until they sweep the ankles. Everything points that way. The popular side panels of plaiting and ornamental fabrics are much longer than their foundations.

LISTEN, WORLD!
BY ELSIE ROBINSON.

If two lines insist on running parallel you can't make an angle out of 'em. If two lines insist on running parallel you can't involve them in a triangle affair. If a triangle appears where all was parallel before, it's a sure sign that one or the other of the original lines went off on a slant, so don't blame it all on the third line that happened along.

This dissertation is meant for the unhappy partners who are always blaming the other fellow for breaking up their married bliss. As a matter of fact, no one can break up married bliss if both the partners consider it bliss.

There's always the beginning of the slant in the original line-up, long before the third line comes along. It may be due to the selfishness of the man or the silliness of the woman or both. But it's there somewhere, you may be sure.

And if you want to get back into the original harmonious arrangement you had best study what caused the original slant and not spend all your fire on the triangle that ended it. For two parallel lines never get mixed up in a triangle unless one of 'em wishes to go slant.

You can't make a triangle if none of the lines want to slant.

Curried Radishes.
Cut some large, firm, unpeeled radishes in good sized cubes and place them in a frying pan containing sizzling olive oil. Cook briskly for thirty minutes, stirring frequently to prevent burning. When done add one teaspoonful of curry powder, springing it in and stirring for five minutes longer, then serve.
